

Lipoedema

You have been diagnosed with lipoedema and you are seeking reliable information, encouragement, and support. Experts from International Lipoedema Association (ILA)* on lipoedema have summarized the most important information to support your journey with lipoedema in the best possible way.

What lipoedema is:

- The major symptoms of lipoedema are disproportional fat distribution and pain in the legs. The fat distribution is symmetrical in both legs. In some cases, the upper arms can be involved too.
- The disease is exclusively present in women.
- The vast majority of women with lipoedema also suffer from obesity.
- Lipoedema might affect your daily work and social life, your relationships, your self-esteem and your leisure activities.

What lipoedema does NOT:

- Include fluid in the tissue of the legs and/or arms (also known as oedema).
- Cause lymphoedema.
- Worsen over time. However, if accompanying obesity is allowed to progress, the lipoedema can too.

How to empower yourself treating your lipoedema successfully:

It's essential to understand all aspects of your lipoedema, including the diagnosis and the treatment.

Stay physically active, as it is beneficial for your health: in reducing pain, improving your feeling of well-being and managing your weight.

A holistic therapeutic approach is important: you will benefit both physically and psychologically from this.

Lipoedema benefits from keeping your weight as stable as possible. Dieting increases the risk of gaining weight in the long term.

Realistic and achievable expectations and goal setting are important to prevent disappointment and to help you realize the success you achieve.

Provision of appropriate compression garments will help for pain relief, to support the soft tissue, and to improve your mobility. Flat knit garments are preferable.

Seek support with regards to psychological issues. Learning to cope with stress and anxiety and increasing your self-esteem is important.

Liposuction can be considered, but only under certain circumstances.
